

Healing is reciprocal:

restoring ecosystems improves human wellbeing and healthy communities.

Local actions ripple outward to influence broader relationships.

Every sector has a role.

No single group can restore ecosystems alone.

2025 Nature Restoration Forum: Rebuilding Canada

Interconnectedness of Land, People & Wildlife

Central Role of Indigenous Leadership

Shared Responsibility

Efforts must be co-developed, weaving multiple knowledge systems into decision-making, governance, and implementation.

Land, water, wildlife, and human wellbeing function as one inseparable system

Outcomes strengthen when Indigenous Knowledge leads alongside Western science

Communities need time, patience and trust.

Trust-building & respect

Success is an iterative process requiring consistency and adaptability.

It is a web of knowledge and actions shaping a future where communities and nature thrive together.

We're on a shared journey: exploring new ways of working, and being transparent about outcomes.

Shaping a story of HOPE

Rebuilding Canada is about strengthening connections between people and the natural world.

We need to help one another access shared learning; a network supporting coordination, visibility, and working side-by-side without silos.

Restoring nature as a nation-building project
